Eye and Vision Research, p. 8
Charitable organizations, like human beings, are constantly called upon to exceed expectations, to push boundaries, to anticipate change and to be prepared. Challenge forces us out of our comfort zones. It forces us to grow.

At Midwest Eye-Banks, we have grown as an organization, as teams and as individuals serving a great mission. Our challenge is to build on our strengths, to manage change… to grow with excellence.

Excellent things have indeed been happening. Cornea donations and provisions for sight-restoring surgery have exceeded our projections. We’re working with surgeons to incorporate new technology, provide better services and offer the greatest benefit to patients. We’re improving our organization with a focus on benefiting communities, growing partnerships and contributing to the global practice of eye banking.

But to grow with excellence, our leadership team must organize itself around measurable success factors. As a first step, we have implemented corporate dashboard reports that enable our management to view trends and correlations at a glance. This drives improvements in a number of areas, particularly in our clinical programs.

This effort now continues in the form of strategic planning. Beginning in summer, 2011, we’ve involved key stakeholders and our entire staff in developing a strategy for growth. Our three-year Strategic Plan takes a fresh look at our mission, vision and values, and will use them to guide our primary objectives and priorities throughout that time. We want more opportunities to restore sight to more people.

We’re inspired to continue the work of our heroes – leaders who, in years past, saw similar opportunities and became pioneers of eye banking as we know it. This year, we mourn the loss of two such leaders: John W. Henderson, M.D., Ph.D., founding surgeon of the Michigan Eye-Bank, and A. Charles Weir, who truly helped to establish the organizational values of Midwest Eye-Banks and the Michigan Eye-Bank as a member of our Board of Directors. We honor the work of these men by carrying forward the cause that meant so much to them.

We also have the privilege of honoring leaders whose decades of dedication make them especially worthy recipients of Midwest Eye-Banks’ highest award, our Founder’s Award: John Krienke, Ph.D. has championed the Eye-Bank’s mission among Lions, and has strengthened our community relationships through his leadership and volunteer activities. And Busharat Ahmad, M.D. is an internationally-renowned ophthalmologist who began his practice in Marquette, Michigan in 1971 and dedicated much of his 43-year career to community service. In fact, Dr. Ahmad is now renewing his role by partnering once again with Midwest Eye-Banks, as we continue his efforts to develop eye banking and sight restoration programs overseas.

With your continued participation, we will continue connecting with communities, healthcare professionals and those around the world who need us most. We will find more ways to restore sight for more people. Together, we will grow with excellence.

Research and Training

Midwest Eye-Banks supplied a total of 2,859 tissues for research and training to doctors and scientists during Fiscal Year 2010-2011, marking the fifth consecutive year the Eye-Bank has been able to increase the amount of tissue provided in support of promising research projects and training efforts. This increase reaffirms the Eye-Bank’s commitment to fighting blindness on all fronts; for every person whose sight can be restored through corneal transplantation, many more still await treatments that will only be discovered through research.

Donated eye tissue is a precious gift that allows scientists to investigate the causes of blinding eye conditions and find new cures, going far beyond the 10 percent that can be treated with cornea transplants.

Tissue prepared for Endothelial Keratoplasty

Once again, the number of corneal tissues prepared and distributed by Midwest Eye-Banks for posterior lamellar procedures, known as Endothelial Keratoplasty (EK), increased during Fiscal Year 2010-2011, with EK tissue accounting for 1,726 of the 5,697 corneas provided to surgeons by Midwest Eye-Banks. This represents an increase of nearly 20 percent from the previous year.

Endothelial Keratoplasty (EK) Grafts
Midwest Eye-Banks strives to honor the valuable gift given by cornea donors by ensuring that all healthy eye tissue is put to the best possible use. When tissue availability surpasses the local need, the Eye-Bank works with other U.S. eye banks to place tissue with patients around the country. If tissue cannot be placed within the United States, the Eye-Bank will offer it to surgeons elsewhere in the world, often in countries where eye, organ and tissue donation is just beginning to develop.
Corneal transplantation is an effective treatment for approximately 10 percent of all blinding eye conditions. In other words, 90 percent of those who face impaired vision and blindness are still awaiting a cure. And, for most of them, research is the only hope.

That’s why Midwest Eye-Banks goes beyond the traditional role of an eye bank — the recovery, evaluation and distribution of eye tissue for transplantation — and offers seed money grants to promising researchers through its Eye and Vision Research Program.

“Corneal transplantation is one important way of accomplishing our mission, but it is only ONE way,” says Dan Reynolds, the Eye-Bank’s Director of Communications. “To be true to our mission, and to serve those who can’t be helped through transplantation, we have to invest wisely in the search for new ways to help more people see again.”

For those who wait

Eye banks have all but eliminated the U.S. waiting list for transplantable corneas, yet countless vision-impaired patients continue to wait for a cure.

Michelle Hastings, Ph.D. received funding from the Eye-Bank’s Eye and Vision Research Program for her study of Usher Syndrome, the leading genetic cause of combined blindness and deafness.
The Eye-Bank’s research grants, which are usually around $15,000 per project, allow scientists to conduct preliminary research that can be used to apply for larger grants from other organizations, such as the National Institutes of Health. During the Eye and Vision Research Program’s three decades of existence, more than $2.7 million in grants have been awarded, including $112,000 during Fiscal Year 2010-11 alone. The Program also awards student stipends of $2,500 each.

Among this year’s grant recipients is Michelle Hastings, Ph.D., an Assistant Professor at the Chicago Medical School at Rosalind Franklin University of Medicine and Science. Her research focuses on Usher Syndrome, the leading genetic cause of combined deafness and blindness, with a long-term goal of finding a treatment for the disorder using gene therapy.

For now, her laboratory is looking at one particular genetic mutation that is known to cause Usher Syndrome — and the resulting retinitis pigmentosa and deafness — in order to develop the treatment approach and demonstrate the feasibility of therapy for the disease. Known as “the Acadian mutation,” the abnormality Hastings is studying is responsible for all the cases of Usher Syndrome in the Acadian population of Louisiana and is also found in 40 percent of those with Usher Syndrome in Quebec.

“Usher Syndrome itself can be caused by a large number of different mutations in 11 different genetic loci,” Hastings says. “There is no cure or effective therapy for any type of Usher Syndrome mutation.”

“Usher Syndrome itself can be caused by a large number of different mutations in 11 different genetic loci,” Hastings says. “There is no cure or effective therapy for any type of Usher Syndrome mutation.”

The diversity of genes and gene mutations that can cause Usher Syndrome presents a challenge for developing a treatment. Hastings believes that targeting individual mutations through the use of antisense oligonucleotides (ASOs), synthesized nucleic acids that will bind to defective genes and deactivate them, may be a viable option.

“ASOs have a high degree of specificity and can be designed and manufactured relatively easily,” she says, citing their therapeutic use in treating Duchenne’s muscular dystrophy and spinal muscular atrophy to demonstrate the promise of this approach.

Hastings’ results have already shown that ASOs can target and correct the Acadian mutation in isolated cultured human cells and in mice that model the disease.

“These findings are an important step toward developing and ASO-based treatment for Usher Syndrome that could be applied not only to the (Acadian) mutation, but in principle, to a large number of other mutations that cause the disease, as well as retinitis pigmentosa and deafness in general,” she explains.

Her laboratory is working with other experts in the field to move this project forward, and she is grateful to Midwest Eye-Banks for the funding she has received.

“These experiments and the progress we have made would not have been possible without this funding,” she says.

With a little help...

Charitable contributions are miracles for those who can’t afford sight-restoring medical procedures

Tynesha Foster struggled with her vision for years before being diagnosed with a degenerative cornea disease called keratoconus.

Trying to see, she says, was like looking through fragments of broken glass that distorted light, especially at night. It kept her from doing things many people take for granted, like going to college, because she was unable to see and didn’t want to ask others for help.

Doctors tried treating her condition with hard contact lenses, but they did little to improve her vision. "Cornea transplants were my last hope," she says.

But Tynesha was unable to afford the medical procedures necessary for corneal transplantation. Her eye doctor, William Constad, M.D., notified Midwest Eye-Banks of his patient’s special financial needs; the Eye-Bank collaborated with Dr. Constad to help reduce the costs associated with Tynesha’s transplant.

“Nobody should be denied a second chance for sight because of an inability to afford the medical procedure and other associated costs,” explains Charles Pivoney, the Eye-Bank’s Chief Operating Officer.

Pivoney points out that there is never any charge for the tissue itself – it is considered a gift from the donor and his or her family to the recipient. However, the Eye-Bank must normally charge processing fees to help alleviate the substantial costs associated with eye tissue recovery, evaluation and distribution. This cost is usually covered by the recipient’s insurance and billed through the hospital or surgery center. However, when the recipient is uninsured and cannot afford the procedure, the Eye-Bank does everything in its power to waive or reduce the fees for its services. This is made possible through much-needed charitable contributions from the individuals and organizations that support the Eye-Bank.

Through charitable support, the Eye-Bank is able to ensure everyone is given the chance for restored sight.

“Every day, we have eye donors providing a gift,” Pivoney continues. “In the same vein, when someone needs help, we ought to be there.”

Tynesha is happy to report that she is doing well and, while her vision may never be perfect, it is getting better. She hopes to undergo the procedure in her other eye next year, and return to college soon.

“I’m grateful I was actually able to have a transplant,” she says, crediting her donor, her doctor and the Eye-Bank for making it possible. Tynesha was one of 151 people in Midwest Eye-Banks’ service area for whom the Eye-Bank was able to reduce or waive its service fees during Fiscal Year 2010-11.

The graphs below are based on figures audited by Yeo & Yeo, P.C. for the Fiscal Year 2010-11, which ended on June 30, 2011.

Direct expenses are allocated between two major categories, which are reported on a functional basis: program services (clinical programs, public and professional education programs and research programs) and support services (administration and fundraising).

Indirect expenses are allocated among the various programs and support services. Certain indirect expenses are allocated among all five (5) areas, such as depreciation of equipment, salaries of corporate staff and liability insurance.

Clinical Programs: Includes the cost of tissue recovery; medical supplies; tissue shipment to Midwest Eye-Banks labs, surgeons and researchers; serological testing; tissue evaluation, preservation and storage; surgery scheduling; placement of tissue; salaries of technical staff.

Education Programs: Includes the cost of developing and printing educational materials such as brochures, donor cards, audio-visual materials for hospital in-services, public speaking engagements and a variety of other outreach programs, as well as salaries for the education staff.

Research Programs: Includes the cost of the Research Grant Program and costs related to recovery and distribution of research and training tissue, the cost of subsidizing research and training tissue to researchers and ophthalmology residents and an appropriate allocation of technical and support salaries.

Administration: Includes the cost of rent, utilities, information services, financial audits, personnel, accounting and the salaries of administrative and clerical support staff.

Fundraising: Includes salaries of development office staff and the expenses related to solicitation of contributions, as well as an appropriate allocation of overhead.

Tissue Distribution: Includes reimbursement received from hospitals and surgical centers.
Illinois Eye-Bank

Night for Sight at the Ballpark
More than 300 supporters of the Illinois Eye-Bank, Watson Gailey attended its Night for Sight at the Ballpark on July 17, when the Normal CornBelters took on the Southern Illinois Miners at the Corn Crib, the CornBelters new home.

A portion of each ticket sale benefited the Eye-Bank, and included an all-you-can-eat barbeque.

Aviators Night for Sight
Aviators Night for Sight, held on October 16, was the debut event of the Ambassadors for Vision (A4V) Council, a group of young, successful Chicago-based professionals who discovered the Eye-Bank’s mission and chose to take the next step by getting involved.

The event honored young cornea recipient Anthony Diaz.

Helmed by Franco La Marca and Anthony Contrucci, Aviators Night for Sight was a completely sponsor- and donor-driven event, held in partnership with Marquis Jets. Attendees enjoyed global gastronomy, Monte Carlo-style gaming, live entertainment, a fashion show and displays of exotic cars and private jets.

Summer Sight Soiree
After a dozen successful years with its popular Gift of Sight Gala, the Illinois Eye-Bank brought in new life and a new identity with its inaugural Summer Sight Soiree in June, 2011.

“The Gala was always a successful event, but this year we wanted to try something new,” explains Diane Hollingsworth, the Eye-Bank’s Executive Director. “Our event committee, chaired by David Donnersberger, M.D., did an incredible job putting together an event that appealed to all ages, it was a spectacular evening.”

The Soiree was held at the Peninsula Hotel in Chicago, and honored Jean Antoniou as 2011’s Woman of Vision, and named Randy Epstein, M.D. as the Gift of Sight Honoree. CBS2’s Ryan Baker acted as Master of Ceremonies.

Lions Eye-Bank of New Jersey

Night with the Somerset Patriots
The Lions Eye Bank of New Jersey teamed up with the Somerset Patriots, a minor league baseball team, to raise awareness about eye, organ and tissue donation during a game at TD Bank Ballpark in Bridgewater on August 3.

“It was a beautiful night, and we appreciate those who turned out to support the Eye Bank,” says Cathy Wasner, Community Engagement Coordinator for the Eye Bank.

Visionary Award Banquet 2010
The Lions Eye Bank of New Jersey was proud to honor Lion Al Brandel, Past President of Lions Clubs International and LCIF Chair; Lion Gene Polgar, President and CEO of the Lions Eye Bank of Delaware Valley; and LensCrafters as 2010’s Visionaries of the Year at a banquet at Mayfair Farms in West Orange on October 13.

“We chose our Visionaries because they have done what others have not,” explains Margaret Chaplin, the Eye Bank’s Executive Director. “They have stepped up and made miracles happen for those who might otherwise face blindness.”

The Eye Bank also paid tribute to the late Lion Horace Brown, who passed away last year after many years of supporting the organization’s sight-restoring mission, and honored Lions Clubs, individuals and organizations that earned the Ken Mattfield Award by contributing $1,000 or more during the previous fiscal year.

Michigan Eye-Bank

Big House Big Heart

A team of more than three dozen walkers, runners, wheelers and strollers represented the Michigan Eye-Bank at the Big House Big Heart 5K, 10K and one-mile races in Ann Arbor on October 3. Participants were invited to raise money for their favorite charitable organizations.

Team Michigan Eye-Bank raised more than $4,000, thanks to its dedicated team members, led by honorary captain Cassandra Perry, a bilateral cornea recipient, and her children, Elizabeth and Jack.

“We’re thrilled that this group of participants chose to support us,” says Lisa Langley, the Eye-Bank’s Executive Director. “They have done amazing things to raise money in support of our mission.”

Ride-a-Thon

After undergoing sight-restoring cornea transplants, Gary Abud wanted to give back to the organization that made his gift of sight possible. Drawing upon his own passion for indoor cycling, Abud, a Spinning instructor, hosted his second Ride-a-Thon for the Michigan Eye-Bank at Next Level Health and Fitness in St. Clair Shores on June 5.

“After years of struggling with my vision, I cannot begin to describe how my transplants have changed my life,” says Abud, who was diagnosed with keratoconus—a degenerative cornea disease—at age 10. “By raising money for the Eye-Bank, I can help them continue in their mission of sight restoration.”

Ride-a-Thon participants joined in one-hour spinning sessions held throughout the day, all led by Abud, and refueled after their workout with hamburgers and hot dogs, grilled by Next Level’s owner.

Michigan Eye-Bank Golf Benefit

About 100 golfers gathered for the Michigan Eye-Bank’s Golf Benefit on June 20 at the prestigious University of Michigan Golf Course in Ann Arbor.

“The fact that people return year after year tells us that they enjoy this event,” says Midwest Eye-Banks’ Director of Communications and Golf Committee Chair Dan Reynolds. “We’re thrilled to have their support. But if this event is to survive, we will need to lean more heavily on our partners, including surgeons and transplant industry groups who can help us to attract a larger, more diverse group of sponsors and golfers.”

Despite a brief downpour, golfers enjoyed a full day of golf, food and drinks. One lucky golfer even managed a hole-in-one.

At the end of the day, participants gathered at the club house to receive their prizes and learn more about the Eye-Bank’s mission. During the program, the Michigan Eye-Bank received a check for $1,500 from the Bank of Ann Arbor for being a top 15 finalist in their Sweet Fifteen Facebook Contest.

Those familiar with Midwest Eye-Banks are likely already aware of the eye banking services it provides – the recovery, evaluation and placement of tissue for transplant, research and education. Many also know about the vital seed money grants it provides to eye and vision researchers investigating the causes of and cures for blinding eye conditions. But perhaps fewer have heard about the important services the organization offers to other eye banks.

As part of its commitment to strengthening eye banking around the world, Midwest invested in the development of a software application, Midwire, that allows for electronic tissue tracking and digital recordkeeping.

Initially launched in 2007, Midwire took on a life of its own in 2010, when Midwire Systems became a subsidiary of Midwest Eye-Banks and began providing the Midwire software application to other eye banks. Today, Midwire’s customers include Midwest Eye-Banks, the Iowa Lions Eye Bank, the Heartland Lions Eye Bank, the Lions Eye Bank of Wisconsin, the Rocky Mountain Lions Eye Bank and the Vision Share eye bank consortium.

“We’re pleased to have been embraced by the eye banking community,” says Michael O’Keefe, Executive Director of Midwire Systems. “Our system was developed specifically for eye banks, but it is refined to fit each user because we know that every eye bank has its own way of doing things.”

When putting Midwire in place at an eye bank, O’Keefe and his team take great care to minimize disruptions to the eye bank’s workflow, evaluating its previous system and addressing any disturbances as quickly as possible. Midwire staff work with eye bank staff to define terminology and functionality, ensuring the software is customized for how the eye bank does business.

Iowa Lions Eye Bank Executive Director Cindy Reed was particularly impressed by the efforts made by Midwire staff in tailoring Midwire to meet her needs.

“They put in a lot of time, patience and strategy to make sure the system was working for us,” explains Reed.

As a result, the Iowa Lions Eye Bank is experiencing more efficient placement of corneas and improved donor documentation, allowing the distribution manager to know exactly what tissue is available at any given time. Because of Midwire’s ability to integrate with QuickBooks, the Eye Bank is also able to issue electronic invoices, instead of having to handwrite them.

“The major benefit is the time savings for our people,” Reed explains, “and their ability to do their work far more efficiently because of electronic record tracking and the integration with financial systems.”

O’Keefe is glad to hear about these success stories. “This is a platform for collaboration between eye banks,” he says.

Community Engagement staff, Ambassadors and other volunteers focus on Eye Donor Month and beyond

The Illinois Eye-Bank recognized March as National Eye Donor Month with help from Secretary of State Jesse White, who teamed up with the Eye-Bank for a poster campaign featuring pediatric eye tissue recipients from around the state. Copies of the poster were placed in 180 Secretary of State Driver Facilities to encourage patrons to sign up on the Illinois Organ/Tissue Donor Registry. The Secretary of State’s office also teamed up with the Eye-Bank to give three hospital presentations.

Additionally, during National Eye Donor Month, cornea recipient Sarah Mittler shared her story on WGN TV’s nation-wide Midday News, Executive Director Diane Hollingsworth was interviewed by WGN Radio personality Bill Moller, and the Pike Press in Pittsfield, Illinois, ran a story about eye donation, featuring an interview with Illinois Eye-Bank, Watson Gailey Regional Coordinator Dave Hearn.

“National Eye Donor Month proved to be a great opportunity to pique the media’s interest about what we do,” says Hollingsworth. “It was especially moving to see Sarah share her story with WGN’s viewers.”

But the Illinois Eye-Bank’s activities were by no means limited to March. Staff worked to build relationships with the state’s Lions Clubs, attending the State Convention and various District and Zone meetings, and worked directly with many individual Clubs.

Other activities for the year included Donor Tribute Ceremonies with Gift of Hope and the Muscoskeletal Transplant Foundation, and the Red Shoe Run for Donor Awareness, hosted by the family of Carrie Jane Smith, who became a cornea and tissue donor at the age of 28.

The Lions Eye Bank of New Jersey completed Phase I of its I Joined! Donor Registry program, which began in 2008, by providing information about eye, organ and tissue donation to every Lions Club in the service area. The majority of Clubs were given this information in a presentation, but the Clubs that couldn’t be reached were mailed the information.

The Eye Bank also coordinated eight Lions Donor Days, with the help of volunteers from 10 Lions Clubs at Motor Vehicle Commission offices throughout New Jersey. The Lions volunteers helped educate customers about the importance of joining the Donate Life NJ Donor Registry.

Additionally, the Eye Bank was represented at 36 health fairs and community events during FY 2010-11, including the New Jersey Education Association’s Annual Convention, held in Atlantic City.

“We worked with Donate Life NJ to distribute guides to high school teachers,” says Cathy Wasner, Community Engagement Coordinator for the Lions Eye Bank of New Jersey. “Hopefully, these guides will help them incorporate information about eye, organ and tissue donation into their curriculum, as mandated by the 2008 Hero Act.”

To commemorate National Eye Donor Month, the Eye Bank paid special tribute to cornea donors and their families at a March 13 Donor Remembrance Ceremony at Community Medical Center in Toms River. About 100 people were in attendance. It was the Eye Bank’s first time holding such an event.

Another first-time event for the Eye Bank was the Celebration of Sight, featuring the artistic works of cornea recipients. It was held on October 28 at the Clark Public Library. Recipient and photographer Christine Scarano’s work was the highlight of the event, and Christine was on hand to talk about her craft.

Contributor Profile
Hopewell Valley Lions Club, Hopewell Valley, New Jersey

The Hopewell Valley Lions Club has a simple reason for contributing to the Lions Eye Bank of New Jersey: The Eye Bank provides a service that is unduplicated, according to Paul Morin, the Club’s President.

The Eye Bank’s mission of sight restoration ties in closely with Lions Clubs International’s support for vision-related programs. In fact, at the urging of Helen Keller, Lions Club members have served as Knights of the Blind since 1925.

Morin says that about half the Hopewell Valley Lions Club’s efforts support sight-related causes, while the other half is aimed at youth-related programs.

The Club first heard about the Eye Bank when a representative gave a presentation about it at a Club meeting several years ago. Later, when the Club received a letter from the Eye Bank asking for support, the members were happy to oblige.

For more information about the Hopewell Valley Lions Club, visit www.hopewellvalleylions.org. The Club meets at 7 p.m. on the first Thursday of each month at the Mercer County Public Library and at 6:30 p.m. on the third Thursday of each month at H I Rib & Co. in Pennington, New Jersey. Guests are welcome.

Sharing the message
Michigan Eye-Bank staff and volunteer Ambassadors logged more than 1,000 hours representing the Eye-Bank at more than 160 events across the state, including the Ann Arbor Art Fair, the World’s Longest Breakfast Table in Battle Creek, the Crim Races Pancake Breakfast and the Manistee County Fair. As a direct result of these efforts, 3,631 people added their names to the Michigan Organ Donor Registry.

“We’re proud of our Ambassadors,” says Alison Claerhout Wright, Community Engagement Manager of the Michigan Eye-Bank. “They’ve embraced our message of sight restoration and taken it to their own communities on our behalf.”

Buddy Day, held on April 12, was another opportunity for Ambassadors to shine. More than 300 volunteer “buddies” – many of whom represented the Eye-Bank and Lions and Lioness Clubs – staffed tables at Michigan Secretary of State branch offices across the state, encouraging customers to join the Donor Registry. By the end of the day, 2,549 more people had joined the Donor Registry.

But Buddy Day was not the only way newly elected Secretary of State Ruth Johnson showed her support for eye, organ and tissue donation. Johnson urged her staff to, when time permits, ask customers at branch offices about joining the Donor Registry. By the end of July, her efforts, along with those of the Eye-Bank and other partners, had helped grow the Donor Registry to 2.2 million people.

Honoring those who gave
In an effort to honor the donors and their families who gave the gifts of sight, life and mobility, the Michigan Eye-Bank worked with Gift of Life Michigan to host two Donor Family Ceremonies, one in Grand Rapids, for families on the western side of the state, and one in Novi, for those on the eastern side of the state.

“These ceremonies illustrate all that is good and kind in the world,” says Lisa Langely, Executive Director of the Michigan Eye-Bank. “They allow us the opportunity to meet our donor families, and to remember with them their love ones’ final acts of generosity.”

Contributor Profile
Richard and Casey Chase, Holt, Michigan

After undergoing two cornea transplants — one in 2006 and the other in 2008 — Richard Chase knew what a remarkable gift he had received. He considers his transplants “a miracle.”

“That’s what got my attention,” Richard says. “I realized someone made a donation, and I had a lot to be thankful for.”

Inspired to learn more about the organization that made his sight possible, Richard and his wife, Casey, decided to travel from their home in Holt to visit the Michigan Eye-Bank’s Ann Arbor facility in June, 2010 — something they now urge others to do, too. They were moved by what they saw, and knew they had to do something to give support in a useful way.

Executive Director Lisa Langley and Midwest Eye-Banks Senior Vice President Brad Tennant met with them to discuss some options. Looking at what was presented to them, the Chases wanted to know, “Which of these things would do the most good?”

They finally settled on funding an innovative training program for the staff of the Communications and Logistics Center (CLC), which acts as the communications portal between Midwest Eye-Banks’ member eye banks and important contacts, including donor families. The program provided much-needed training on how to work with grieving families who must make important donation decisions, and used actors to simulate real-life situations. It was an immediate success, and provided CLC representatives with tools and techniques that will be incorporated into ongoing training.

The Chases were invited to sit in on the week-long training program, to see their contribution in action. They were impressed by what they saw, and many of the CLC staff expressed their appreciation for the program.

“It made me realize that the people who are making these calls have to have great passion for what they do,” says Casey.

In addition to their financial support, Richard and Casey urge everyone they know, both family and friends, to sign up on the Donor Registry. On a recent trip to visit their daughter and her family in Illinois, they talked to her about the Eye-Bank and donation, asking if she had a red heart on her driver’s license. She didn’t at the time, but within 24 hours, Richard had received an email from her, saying, “Dad, you’ll be happy to know that I am now a donor.”

Richard and Casey hope that their efforts to give something back to the Eye-Bank will help to enhance the quality of others’ lives — just as Richard himself was helped.
